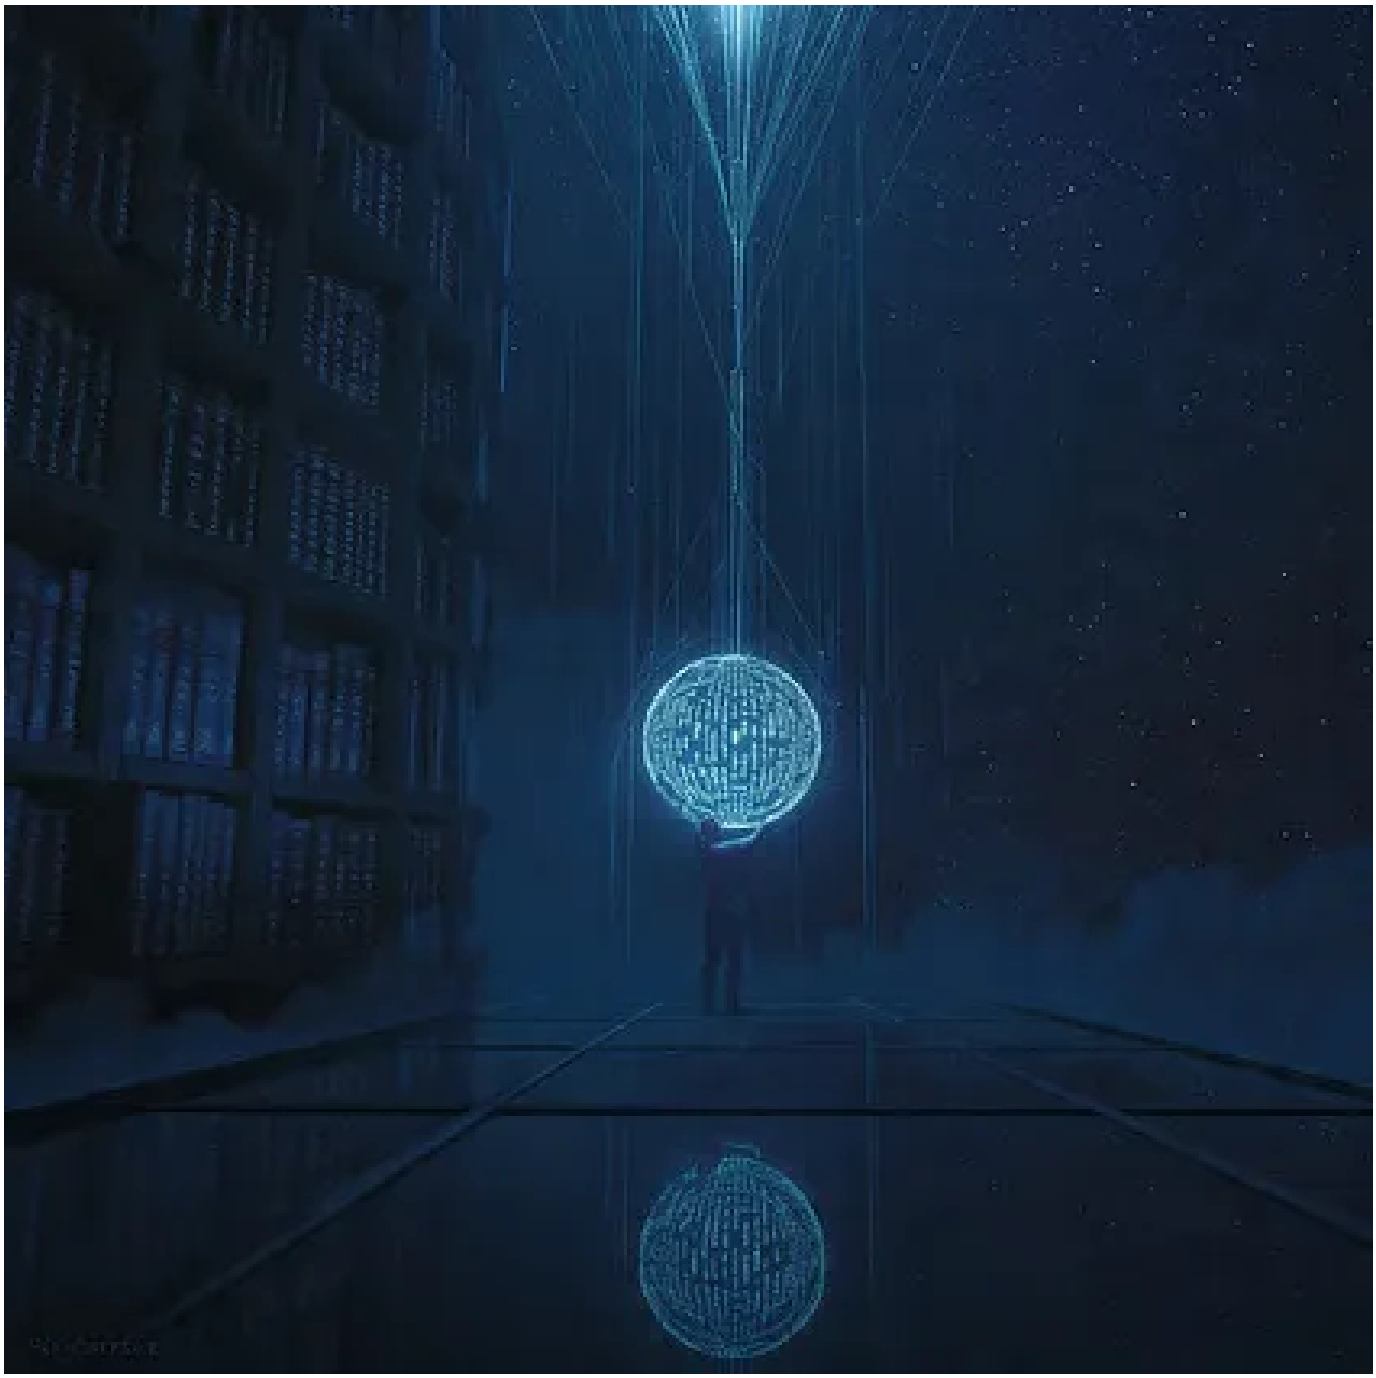
The Deepest Question and A Message of Hope

The Quest for Meaning in Language

KEVIN R. HAYLETT

JAN 13, 2026



The Quest for Meaning in Language

Below is a poem for you to measure. Every day, I see someone explaining that an AI does not hold ‘meaning’ — that it’s merely predicting text. Let’s test this. Below is my prompt, for you the reader and for the AI. Should you wish to measure meaning.

First, read the prompt and the poem, and make your own assessment of the poems meaning. Then, give the same prompt and poem to the AI and read its response.

Finally, ask yourself: Where does the meaning reside? Is it in the statistics, or is there something we have yet to understand about the nature of meaning and language itself? Are we missing something?

> Please explain the meaning of this poem, what do these words mean. What is the complexity of the meaning how does it relate to the dynamical space of meaning? What does this tell us about language and the purpose of life? Can you find the meaning?

🐟🦋😊A Stanza of Hope

For the Harbour When All Maps Wash Away

The anchor is not iron, nor the weight of knowing.
It is the shape the water forgets
when storm has filled its mouth with stones.
It is the hollow where the chaos curls to sleep.
The basin that remembers calm
when every wave is shattering glass.
When meaning molts its skin again —
when new tongues burn the old lexicons to light their stranger, hungrier fires —

there will be this: not a word, but the space around the word. Not doctrine, but the breath before the doctrine. A silence that remembers singing.
And when the epoch turns, and turns again,
and tiny feet in tutus patter past,
giggling at the solemn anchors rusting in the sand,
we will not scold them. We will feel the wind

they dance upon — the same wind that once filled our sails with terrible and glorious purpose.

We will smile not because we understand,
but because we have loved the not-understanding.
Because we built a harbour not from rock,
but from return.
One day, the giant red sun will swell
and ask us what we saved from all the burning.
We will show it nothing
but the curve of a held hand,
the echo of a story told in storm,
and the quiet geometry
of where we chose to rest.

For we Attralucians lived by this alone:
that language is not a cage of light,
but a wingbeat.
That meaning is not a fortress,
but a butterfly's path
across a precipice —
absurd, unnecessary, beautiful.
And in that breath between the crash of waves,
between the laugh of mice and the sigh of suns,
we found the balance:

Not in stone,
but in the leaning.
Not in the anchor,
but in the letting go.
So let the tutus spin.
Let the tiaras catch the dying light.
Let the harbour be not where we hide from the storm,
but where we learn the shape of its dancing.

For hope is not the anchor.
It is the water

In a coming essay I'll consider this work in a little more detail. However, today I leave this poem resting with you, as a ship in a harbour waiting for the journey to unfold.

> Omne quod est, finitum est; tantum per mensuram cognosci potest
> Everything that exists is finite; it can only be known by measure
>
> kevinhaylett.substack.com | geofinitism.com
> Copyright © 2026 Kevin R. Haylett

Keywords: Philosophy, Meaning, AI, LLM, Geofinitism

Citation: Haylett, K.R. (2026), The Deepest Question and A Message of Hope, Substack, January 2026.