Language, the Cradle of Civilization

The Role of Mythos in Language: We live in language; and in language we live in stories. Mathematical stories, magical stories, stories of wonder, darkness and awe. And ultimately stories of light, song and dance, laughter and joy. We create our own personal mythos and we have the mythos of our cultures. These stories hold our language as a cradle holds a baby. We are the baby.

The Anchor of Hope

Our stories are also the anchor of our lives. The anchor is the symbol of hope: In the darkest of times, hope lay at the bottom of Pandora's Box. Hope, is maybe, more than an idea and lays at the foundations of life. It is the idea that we will wake to a better tomorrow. A tomorrow where the world starts again and life carries on against all odds; and it will be better than today.

In the cradle of your dreams, how does your mythos unfold?
